SPRING ZEPHYRS.

"The Heart Knoweth Its Own Bitterness."
Oh, and sweet words, whose ceaseless echoes roll

Across life's waste of anguish and distress,
Since we were uttered, every human soul
Hath owned your truthfulness!

AY, "the heart knoweth" all it hath to bear—
The slow-crushed hopes that die with long delay.

The heavy burden, and the daily care
That steals our strength away.

It knoweth, when we kneel beside our dead,
In grief too deep for tears to set it free,
The aching desolation and the dread
Of all the days to be.

It knoweth, when we own ourselves bereaved
By worse than death—the sorrowful defeat—
The sense of shame for having been deceived
By dreams so vainly sweet.

It knoweth, too, when we have tried our strength
And tasked endurance to its utmost strain,
The wounded pride with which we see at length
Our work has been in vain.

Yes, "the heart knoweth its own bitterness"
The gloom of doubt, the midnight of despair;
And words are all unmeaning to express
The weight that each must bear.

But one there is who knoweth every cross—
Who owns our weakest struggles for the right,
And leads us still through bitter grief and loss
To Heaven's unclouded height.

—Once a Week.

Who Can't Remember.

I kissed her 'neath the mistletoe,
And December snows,
Beneath the moon, again in June,
I kissed her by the rose;

I decked her hair with apple blossoms
Between the April showers;
When autumn came, I did the same
With cool October flowers.

A happy twelvemonth rolled away,
And with it rolled my money;
With tear and sigh, we said good-by;
How sad it was, and funny!

All this was thirty years ago,
And, well, she can't remember;
She can't, you see, for she wears that she
Was twenty last November.

—Burton Egbert Stevenson, in N. Y. Sun.

One of His Names.

Never a boy had so many names;
They called him Jimmy, and Jim and James
Jimmie, and Jamie, and well he knew
Who it was that wanted him, too.

The boys in the street ran after him,
Shouting out loudly: "Jimmy! Hey, Jim!"
Until the echoes, little and big,
Seemed to be dancing a Jim Crow jig.

And little Mabel, out in the hall,
"Jimmy! Jimmy!" would sweetly call,
And she would nuzzle and let her know
Where she might find him, she loved him so.

Grandpa, who was dignified,
And held his head with an air of pride,
Didn't believe in abridging names,
And made the most he could of "J-a-m-e-s."

But if papa ever wanted him,
Crisp and curt was the summons: "Jim!"
That would make the boy on his errands run
Much faster than if he said: "My son."

The Afterglow.

Long after the sun had gone down,
And the gorgeous display
That lit up the heavens with flame all around
Had faded away;

When darkness lies down o'er the earth
Her dear gauzy veil,
And hushed are the sounds of sadness or mirth
O'er hill and o'er dale;

Then lingering after in the west,
As if loth to go,
Till its lover the earth had been fondly caressed,
Is the soft afterglow.

And so it is in the hearts of men
There linger for years—
Though time in its course claims again and again

Their smiles and their tears,
Bright visions that tenderly flit,
Sweetly and slow,
And afar the horizon of memory is lit
With a soft afterglow.

—Julia L. Pettie, in Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

But Yesterday.

The girl I love was married yesterday.
My boyhood's love, so full of rosy dreams
And bashful whisperings and timidity;
So careless of the future, so content,
And trustful, with no thought that there might be a cloud in our bright sky, or that we two Should ever be but children. Yet, ah, me!
The girl I love was married yesterday.

The girl I love was married yesterday.
I never spoke of love to her. 'Twas long
Before I knew, and then I ever feared
It was a boy's affection and would pass.
And so I waited silent, and resolved
To see the world a little. Then, perhaps—
The world I've seen a little, but they say
The girl I love was married yesterday.

The girl I love was married yesterday.
I did not think that they would hurt me so,
Those few short words: for I have laughed, and said

My love was dead, and I could go my way
Forgetting and forgotten. But, alas!
Too late my heart has learned its sad mistake.
The girl I love was married yesterday.

—Brooklyn Life.

Alone.

The breath comes slow, the pulse is faint,
The voice is no more heard,
Mortality is floating by on waters faintly stirred.

A life that is the balance of ceaseless, away-
ing time,
Eternity approaches with step and mien sublime.

A world of joys and sorrows is slowly passing Hands held in farewell pressure, await the word good-by.

A fount of tears runs over, where brooding
silence reigns.
A mortal life is ending its earthly joys and pains.

A rustle light of drapery, a hastily drawn sigh.
A life on earth is ended—soul goes floating by.
Out on a sea that opens upon a world unknown.
To which the journey thither must ever be—
alone.

—Clark W. Bryan, in Good Housekeeping.

He Still Loved Her.

"Do you love me still?" asked the sweet young wife,
As she stood by her husband's chair.

"I don't," he said, and a shadow dark
Crept over her forehead fair.

"No, I'm certain I do not love you still;
If the reason you wish to know,
It is that I love to hear your voice
As around the house you go."

—N. Y. Press.

In Childhood Days.

In far-off childhood days, when tender care
And mother-love were all the world I knew—
Except the one a baby's fancy drew,
Propelled by dreams, by visions quaint and fair—
I thought, when in a woman's garb should wear
My mother, playing in life's dawn away,
Would be my child; whose pathway I would strew

With joys for whom all burdens bear.

I held her in my arms a little while;
A child she was as helpless as at birth,
A child too weary for the far of earth.
It was my joy to win her fleeting smile;
Oh, soon there fell a silence, breathless, deceit

My arms are empty, she is fast asleep.

Grocers Get no Rebate on Sugar.

New York, April 23.—The wholesale grocers from various States and the managers of the sugar refiners' combination have been in conference in this city this week on the advisability of requesting the extension of the rebate system. It seems to be the general impression that arrangements could easily be made with the trust. The sugar people asked that the further consideration of the matter on their part be postponed to the present. Most of the grocers left town, therefore, feeling that their mission had been a failure.
